ROBBERS LEFT SAFE LOADED.

In their efforts to blow the safe the robbers used nitroglycerin, but the first charge failed to demolish the safe doors, though it injured the combination. They were frightened off.

The services of Harry Knight, a safe expert from Cincinnati, were secured to assist the bank officials in opening the safe. While Knight was tapping the doors there was a terrific explosion that wrecked the entire office and shattered windows in the vicinity of the bank. Pieces of twisted steel were torn from the safe doors and hurled violently across the room. One piece demolished the desk and office chair, passing within a few inches of Cashier Charles McPherson's head, finally crashing through a door. The hammer in the hand of Expert Knight was torn from the handle and sent through the plate-glass front window. About ten persons were in the bank at the time, but escaped serious injury.

ACCIDENT ON INSIDE OF BLAST FURNACE AT ILLINOIS STEEL WORKS.

Only rare presence of mind and the agility of a trained sailor saved Andrew Anderson from the fate of his three fellow laborers in being dashed to the ground from a scaffolding on the inside of a new blast furnace at the Illinois Steel company's works, South Chicago, Ill., Wednesday afternoon. Four men were at work upon the inside of the huge tank of the furnace, when a chain running through the tackle which supported their scaffolding broke, letting the whole platform fall with a crash to the ground. Anderson, with the quickness of a cat, sprang for the center beam, technically called the "mast" of the furnace, and grasping it as a sailor would a rope, slid safely to the ground. His three companions did not fare so well, but were picked up, battered, bleeding and unconscious and taken to the company's hospital.

Alec Paul, stealing a ride; legs crushed. While coming down a steep hill north of the city the engine of a through freight broke loose from the balance of the train and in trying to couple the two parts together the engine was struck by the train and thrown into the ditch. Some telegraph poles which were on a flat car were thrown into the cab of the engine by the force of the concussion and threw the throttle wide open, pinning it down in such a manner that the engineer lost all control of the engine and it started down the track at a terrific speed. The engineer and fireman, seeing their danger, jumped and were uninjured, but the engine continued down the track and collided with a Chicago bound passenger train and derailed the train and telescoped the engine.

Warnings Unheeded by the Ventresome Fellows, Who Were Witnessing a Football Game from the Roof of a Factory—Thirteen Dead, Others Dying.

Thirteen persons were killed and more than 100 injured, some of them fatally, by the collapse of the roof of a building from where they were surreptitiously viewing a football game between the Stanford and University of California teams Thursday afternoon in San Francisco.

All the hospital and police ambulances were called into requisition and private carriages were taken from the paddock of the football arena and pressed into service. Dead and wounded were hurried away to various hospitals, and in some instances to their homes, so that it is impossible to make up a complete list of the victims, although eighty-two have been cared for. The accident occurred at the San Francisco and Pacific glass works, located at Filbert and Bryant streets.

Despite the efforts of a large force of police and private guards at the works, 500 persons had broken through the lines and clambered to the roof, which afforded a fine view of the game.

Warnings Not Heeded.
The proprietors of the factory realized the danger to those on the roof, but repeated warnings were turned back by jeers. The nearest police station was notified of the condition of affairs and a squad of officers had just arrived to dislodge the trespassers when the roof gave way. Ninety-eight persons fell through the roof to the floor below. The furnace was in full blast and the heat was terrific. The dome of the furnace is broken in one spot, and it is here that Gumper is believed to have plunged through to a frightful death. The crash of the breaking roof and the shouts and screams of the victims were heard for blocks. The dense crowds that immediately gathered around the glass works made the work of rescue difficult and added to the general excitement and confusion. Bodies were brought out and speedily whirled away in express wagons, private carriages, ambulances and whatever conveyance was most available.

Crowded the Hospital.
The Southern Pacific hospital, within two blocks of the scene of the accident, was speedily filled and many of the wounded were turned away. The late comers were taken to St. Luke's, near by drug stores or the receiving hospital. Ambulances were reserved for the injured, while the corner removed the dead in express wagons. Twenty thousand persons were in the amphitheater and paddock, two blocks away, watching the football game, and when white-faced uhlers hurried through the crowd, calling for surgeons, the game was abandoned and the spectators surged to the gates, anxious to see what had happened and help the injured. In this crush to get out a number of persons were trampled upon, dresses were torn and there were many minor injuries. A majority of the victims were boys, ranging in years from 10 to 15 years. The fires in the furnaces had been started for the first time Thursday, and the vats were full of liquid glass. It was upon these that the victims fell. Some were killed instantly and others were slowly roasted to death.
